Study of a Bee and a Beetle

This beautiful study of a bumblebee and a dung beetle is very well preserved. In a very sensitive and realistic way, both insects were drawn and enlarged to about twice their realistic size. The drawing is very detailed but the artist here goes much further than making the most accurate possible study of 2 insects: he elevates the composition to a work of art. Note the drop shadows and the tension between the insects.

The work is presented in a beautiful 17th-century frame.

Black ink and watercolor, 84 x 114mm
